“ In 1987, we had just moved into our home after my transfer to Kankakee. Our first house guests (I think right after the moving van had left) were Paul and Deb. They became our best of friends while we lived there. The wives would create a storm cooking in the kitchen while Paul and I made sure their glasses weren't empty too long.

Over the following years, we stayed in touch no matter where we ended up, often visiting each other on vacations. Deb was a wonderful person to know, and will be missed. Our memories of her, though, will always put a smile on our faces.

“ One Christmas Eve in the late 1970's, our brother Tom made his special eggnog. He sprinkled each glass with what he thought was nutmeg; he had actually grabbed the poultry seasoning by mistake. We raised our glasses to toast the season, and took a sip. Before the rest of us could say anything, Deb said "This tastes like chicken!"

“ Back in the early 1980s, my two sisters and I took Debbie out to dinner for her birthday. We went to a Mexican restaurant called El Sombrero in Des Plaines, which also offered live entertainment. When asked what song the birthday girl would like to hear, she said, "Do you know Edelweiss?" Only our Deb would request to hear "Edelweiss" in a Mexican restaurant!
