“ I was very sad to see that John died. I played in Rhodes when they got the band back together. In my home office, I have a framed picture of the first job we played at the K of C Hall. John had played trumpet and switched over to keyboard. As a senior in high school, I took the trumpet spot. I had a great time with him and the others, on and off the stage. At that point, he had only written two songs which we played. “Fly Away” is the one I remember still. I was amazed that he wrote all the charts for the horns by buying an album, playing it back several times and writing down what he heard. He had an amazing talent. Jeff Leone

“ A memory that stuck with me the most was when John would be writing scores for the Herscher High School Marching band at the same time we were holding practice for the band Rhodes in the living room of the Riordan home. John loved everything about music whether we were practicing, playing a gig or helping out the high school marching band. Durl (played bass in Rhodes) ... I considered John one of my best friends and enjoyed being around. He was the leader of Rhodes in my view and gave us direction with the music we played and how we played it.
