“ Miracles happened on April 20, 1958. Two mothers gave birth to two beautiful baby girls just one hour apart in the same hospital. The mother shared the same hospital room together. That's where the bond of sisterhood and friendship began between Lynn and I. Truth is Lynn and I throughout the years used to laugh about it together. I told her my mother was their first even though she was an hour older. It was just a personal thing between us. I can't even begin to put into words all the beautiful life experiences and celebrations I had the privilege to shared with Lynn. I can tell you that she was a beautiful soul and she had a heart of gold. She would put others before herself and she touched so many peoples lives throughout her life. I can tell you that the news of Lynn's death was heart wrenching not only felt by me ,others felt it too. Wendy and Jacob and the rest of the family I share your loss with you..We were all so blessed with Lynn. May she Rest In Peace.

“ Lynn was my first friend and I was hers, We met when we were 2 years old and spent countless years together on Jan Avenue. (Never mind our mothers were best friends.) Sometimes we'd fight like cats & dogs, then rush right back over to each other's house to play once again. We felt lucky to have been born 1 day apart and often had shared birthday parties. But...we were both Taurus so we always challenged each other.

We felt especially lucky to have been able to share Christmas and Hanukkah with each other, both envious of the others holiday! Lynn and I would often reminisce throughout the years of the fantastic childhood we had been granted. It was artistically creative, (clay people & Lynn & Sandy dolls) Athletic (red light, green light & climbing the weeping willow), and always present were little sister, Wendy & little brothers Mark, John & Paul. And of course, there was the boy next door, James, many a days were spent trying to figure out who he liked better, Lynn or Sandy?

Lynn's artistic ability came naturally to her and I always marveled at how easy it was for her to sculpt clay, draw or write. I feel blessed to have grown up with Lynn and wish ever child could have what Lynn & I had.

Love you Lynn Ann Jaffe!

“ Prayers to the family and friends of Lynn Jaffe. I enjoyed working with Lynn at Asbury ChildCare Center. Lynn had a humorous spirit and a quiet respect for people's beliefs and religious values and views about life. Lynn was very accepting of people and loved caring for children. Lynn had a gift of Art she could draw a picture in a natural talented way. Lynn loved birds and we talked about how we had that in common. Lynn liked to feed birds and listened to them sing in the morning. Lynn was all of these things most of all Lynn was my friend. I will treasure the memories forever until we meet again.

Sincerely,

Leila Owen
